

Personal reflection:

Spend this week completing the assigned readings.
and complete the following reflection.

1. Review all of the posts that you have made since the class started.
2. What do you notice about your posts-- pros/cons, timing, placement, number of posts, details included, citations, references, connections to other student's posts, references to your work place, references to outside resources/websites, etc.
3. What is one aspect that you would like to improve on related to your posts?
4. Identify one area that you are exceptionally proud of related to your posts.
5. What did you learn about your posts by taking the time to reflect on your contributions to the discussions this week?
(No need to comment on one another's posts this week.)

All posts due by Sunday midnight week 8

After reviewing my post for the past seven weeks, I have noticed that my posts are posted on-time, are succinct with regard to the topic being covered and specific in detail. However, as Dr. G. noted, I need to be more cognizant to include citations and references in my posts. When I am posting a response to another student's post I am usually responding to comments that they have made which I can relate to or elaborate on. I reference my work place on numerous occasions which I believe is a good attribute considering everything I learn here relates in some way to my work and in many cases is something that I can apply or utilize immediately to improve the way in which I interact and teach students. I suppose if there is one that I should improve upon it would be the inclusion of citations and/or references link to the content I am posting.

What I am most proud of when I re-read my previous posts is that the writing experiences allowed me to be insightful, it also reminds of how much I have learned and grown while taking this class. In fact I think that is also what I have learned about my posts as I take time to reflect – I can contrast and compare where I am now to where I started from.